Influencing and persuading others are essential capabilities in today's workplace. Professionals are increasingly expected to lead initiatives, shape decisions, gain commitment, and work effectively across organisational boundaries, often without having direct authority over the people involved.

A strong idea alone does not always create action. Even worthwhile proposals can lose momentum when stakeholder priorities are misunderstood, resistance is overlooked, or the message is presented in a way that fails to connect with its audience.

This two-day practical workshop provides participants with a structured approach to influencing in real workplace situations. Through behavioural insights, discussion, realistic scenarios, and hands-on activities, learners explore how to understand stakeholders, recognise sources of resistance, build trust, and select suitable influence tactics.

Participants also practise creating messages that connect with different audiences through framing, tone, and storytelling. The course goes beyond gaining agreement by examining how effective follow-up can reduce friction and turn commitment into action.

By the end of the programme, each participant develops a personalisedInfluence Impact Plan based on a current or upcoming workplace challenge.

Prerequisites
